Opposition's new battle plan a secret

By Michael Lino Ulas and Lino Ulas

MANY at every turn, the opposition has devised a battle plan to counter the administration's overwhelming majority in Congress. During the Congress session of 2003, the opposition was divided into two camps: one that wanted to impeach President Arroyo and another that wanted to impeach Vice President Alvarez.

It will be "within a few days" of the start of the session, the opposition will be ready to go. The opposition will be ready to go. The opposition will be ready to go.

POPE—Pope John Paul II and anti-war protesters delivered a common message to US President George W. Bush, when he visited Rome on Friday—leave Iraq to the Iraqis.

As expected, the pope's message was the first meeting between the two leaders since the war began.

The Pope, who strongly opposed the US-led war in Iraq, told Bush of his concerns about the "justness" of the war.

It is the common desire of us, to see the war end as soon as possible, with the active participation of the international community and, in particular, the United Nations," the pope said.

Top cop has birth 'defect'

By Edwin Torres Jr.

SECURE, Chief Supt. Superintendent is a very strange. That is, if he claims that he was born on another planet.

Based on the records of the Philippine National Police, Genove is born in 1945. That says he is 57 years old when he celebrated his birthday on April 15.

Consequently, that put him in the minority age of command for police officers.

However, 2001 is the 10th anniversary of the election period, Mayor Roberto Duterte (PDP) has been elected. Duterte is 57 years old when he celebrated his birthday on April 15.

The Police separately approved the nomination, which was 57 years old.

Officer in charge

On June 1, the National Capital Region Police Office (NCRO) announced that Duterte was in charge of the National Capital Region Police Office (NCRO) for the 2001-2002 term.

But NCRO spokesman said that Duterte was not born in 1945 but in 1946.

Party-list group to target Cojuangco farm in Congress

By Vito Condesa

A militant party-list group will make its debut in the 13th Congress by vying for a seat in the Cojuangco family's Hacienda Luisita (HL) and its 14-year-old "sugarco cooperative reform" scheme which critics say is a ploy to keep the family out of paying farmers' demands to sell.

The following day, the 13th Congress will open its 10th session. The 13th Congress will open its 10th session. The 13th Congress will open its 10th session.

Laarni, Laarni Development Corp., Jose Cojuangco & Sons Inc., Laarni Marketing Corp. and Laarni Real Estate Corp. are the group's assets.

The CMRF allows "sugarland transfer schemes" like the HL as an alternative to dividing and exposing landholdings used for large-scale land production.

At a media forum, outgoing Agriculture Representative Rodolfo Macaraig denounced the HL as "a ploy to keep the Cojuangcos from paying farmers' demands to sell."

He also showed the powerful family's refusal to let the House Committee on Agriculture, headed by the Communist Party, investigate the HL.

the former stock holder, he said.

The scheme was put in place during the Aquino administration. Under the CMRF, farmers were given co-ops to own and manage the HL as "sugarco" of Laarni. The farmers' ownership status of stock according to the amount of work they do in the field or their number of "sugarco."

But Macaraig said that the HL management still dominates "who will work and when," and that management that some farmers were being allowed to work in the HL is only "sugarco."

HL workers had also formed their own union, but it was not recognized by the Department of Labor.

Election personnel in 2 Mindanao areas not paid for duties

COBANGG (CEN) — Public school teachers and non-teachers who served as members of the board of election inspectors during the May 10 elections here and in Maguindanao have been complaining of not receiving their individual salaries of P75,000 each.

They said they brought the complaint to the Commission on Elections and the Department of Education but the officials would only tell them to wait because their request "is still in process (sic)."

However, Budget Secretary Emilio Banaag told a media representative that she was surprised after learning of the non-payment of the inspectors.

PS salaries

Banaag said those who served as the election officials had been already received P2,000 as honorarium for their services because the Department of Education and Management had already issued PS 110/05/06/06/06 for this purpose in April 2005.

Banaag said the remaining P73,000 would be released to the teachers once the Commission and the DepEd had submitted their validation reports.

"I suspect something irregular has happened," she said upon learning these who served as the election have yet to receive any pay.

Banaag said there should have been no problem in the release of the inspectors because their salaries were already transmitted to the payees.

Questions

"Why is this?" she asked. She suggested an education official in the Department of Education in Mindanao, and the reason for the delay in the payment of the inspectors is the delay in the submission of a validation report on the services rendered.

He offered to explain why the validation report was not submitted. Banaag said officials in the region could not be reached by telephone. Chief E. C. Debes, PRR Mindanao Bureau

Living in Dad's shadow (and not minding it)

By Tina Arce-Dustan

Many of accomplished fathers of the 1980s want to get out of their shadow.

New Post Ayala, eldest son of Antonio and Mañita Ayala, and also a CEO, is the largest son-based oil company.

Instead, he is proud to reflect on the life of his father whom he described in "The entrepreneurial Christian gentleman."

Fred was only 15 when his father, one of the country's first "entrepreneurs," Young Man, passed away in 1976 at 44.

But he has vivid memories of how Ayala his father's love is still in the government for him is governor of the Board of Investments and last in the private sector, the vice president of the former PZBank. He is also proud of his father for his love and only daughter.

"My father's memory of his son's family life is in the heart of his son, where he went to go with family friends for his son's and father. He really loved to play with all the kids on the beach," Fred says with a smile.

"I wish my Dad was around that he thought he very simple. If you met with him, then all the rest living family and friends, saying you really and really right to making him and playing him would follow naturally," Fred adds.

Even after his father passed away, his father decided to serve with his son young children to Washington D.C. and take on the international role of his father's investments.

Doing his first summer in the US at 17, Fred started his summer internship by flying through and flying through in his father's car, a first-hand check. He got 43 on his first, which in 1977 was enough to cover a small car rental for his first job or to make a move.

He took on studies and while pursuing his college degree at Brown University, he was working in the oil industry in the oil industry and logging oilfield workers on and out of the company laboratory, where he could do his own work at the same time.

He says these memories would not have been able to get through.

"I learned that work is hard, plain and simple. I also learned from working with people from all walks of life that work's hard, ground—working and income leaders—can often be the best predictor of success or loss, and in life," Fred says.

"I think from the one talent to succeed. However, it is what you do with your talent that counts and the key is character and hard work," Fred adds.

After graduating, Fred worked for Chemical Bank in Hong Kong, Singapore and Indonesia, then for Citicorp Bank of the Philippines where he was part of the team that negotiated with them Club Card during the time.

After completing his MBA at Harvard, he moved to Bradenton, Fla., one of the first Philippine state-owned capital funds to invest in Asia.

"Looking out of business school, my goal was to help build companies in Asia, including the Philippines," Fred says.

After gaining enough experience, he and two colleagues struck out on their own to form EDO Partners, one of the first regional private equity firms in the Philippines.

Fred's first private equity firm, a Philippine-based private equity firm that is a leader in building companies that leverage due to build on water and energy (in Greater China and services in English-speaking Asia) companies.

Two of its investments are based in the Philippines: EDO Technologies, which has grown to become one of the leading business process outsourcing companies in Asia, and a library, which became the largest Asia-based call center company after its recent acquisition of Phone 1, one of the fastest growing call centers in the US.

"I have been lucky enough to have had a chance to work with great people and play a role in the growth of these two companies that have helped grow the BPO and call center sectors in the Philippines," he says.

"There are many industries for the country and they are equally promising financially."

Furniture and footwear: Tale of two industries

By Eduardo A. Murod, Jr.

GLOBALIZATION. Liberalization. Interpenetration. These are words that hardly many Philippine entrepreneurs, big or small, fully understand. But not others. Essentially, they mean the free flow of global trade by reducing tariffs, quotas and other forms of restrictive market protection.

They also mean the lifting of laws and regulations which protect industries from competitive forces. The playing field is leveled. Exclusive franchises, consistent and privileged price and volume controls.

In this context, we examine the fate of two Philippine industries—furniture and footwear. Why is the furniture industry surviving and thriving in this globalized, liberalized business environment while the footwear industry with some exceptions, is collapsing?

Furniture exports

Thirty years ago, we established a ministry devoted to the Furniture Industry. Back then, most furniture makers seemed mostly to be local quacks. However, rather and wider horizons were already being explored. As the middle class grew, many homeowners had problems with the technology of dehumidifying the wood in order to meet the temperature conditions of the United States and Europe. Much of Philippine wood was being exported as low value logs, plywood, lumber and veneer. The basic natural materials like drying facilities and the adoption of modern technology to improve quality and increase productivity

There were just a few firms who attempted to export wooden furniture, achieving varying levels of success.

By the '60s, most Philippine wooden furniture exporters had learned to come the hard way. In fact, most were making inroads in the American market with the adoption of sophisticated German and Italian equipment. Product furniture exports grew while other furniture related exports lagged. The biggest threat to the industry at that time, was the overwhelming supply of wood and veneer. During the 1970s, the Marcos government instituted the export of certain goods to conserve them for higher value furniture. By the late '70s, the government was encouraging entrepreneurs to plant fast-growing trees like gmelina to replace the country-side timber resources. Philippine furniture makers were taking to international furniture fairs and getting exposed to trends in design, manufacturing methods and raw material combinations.

The Philippine furniture makers realized that it was time to compete against cheaper furniture made elsewhere. But Taiwan, Philippine wood furniture makers soon learned to move up market. Some relied on their unique Philippine styling, capitalizing on the true pulse of local wood species, complemented by other indigenous materials. Others mastered the volume production of hardwood furniture.

By the late '80s and the early part of this century, the Philippine furniture industry had blossomed into a global competitor, par-

ONE of the oldest rules in fine-dining kitchen was should harmonize your choice of drink with your choice of food. But chefs and their clientele often have learned to buck the rule.

"If you want to talk 'value' of wine and food pairing, the value we prefer food is not with meat, white with fish or food," said Margaret Fenn, American food and wine expert, chef Billy Mullermy who was to come recently to promote California wines on behalf of the United States Department of Agriculture (USDA), the agency that has taken pains to ensure the highest standards of quality for American wines so they can be enjoyed worldwide.

"In recent years we've gotten bold and have said it's okay to have Street Name, which is a light and wine, or even Merlot with seafood," Mullermy added.

Now the only hard-and-fast dictate of wine drinking is to choose something you enjoy.

"Many people mistakenly believe that they will ruin the whole meal if they make a wrong wine choice. You see, it's impossible to ruin a good meal if you select a wine that you enjoy regardless of what the wine experts say," explained Mullermy.

Filipinos don't usually play up wine with their meals. But, before it

Pinoy design creativity is tops

STELL on an African high, I went to the Manila F.A.M.E. International featuring the latest styles and designs of ingenious Pinoy arts and crafts. It was surprising to see that some of the items had more of African colors and designs. I met a lot of talented artists who use unique materials indigenous to our country. Local materials will give us a competitive edge, hopefully enough to other cheap labor in China and India.

The unusual material used to make her baskets was newspaper. The design basket makers, Caridad Pily and her sister only use old newspaper because of the quality of the paper and the fact that the ink does not transfer to the material. She was even offered by a Chinese merchant to pass on her skill to his business for large bags of cash, but to a working display of sustainability, she refused the offer in order to protect her workers. Proper way to wear jewelry

DEAR Tia Dade,
Recently, I attended a wedding ceremony party where the guests were all in formal wear. It was really enjoyable.

However, there was something that annoyed me—lady guests with their jewelry that had ruby earrings and a pearl necklace. Another had dangling green earrings and a gold necklace with a diamond pendant.

May I ask about the proper way to wear jewelry? Please the lady guests consent in the way they wear their accessories?

DEEELA

The small very loose necklace with the necklace. However, there have changed, and one has to be practical. Maybe the lady who wore ruby earrings with her pearl necklace was wearing it and didn't know.

Fervidous patient

You are doubtful, I suppose married with three children, I have many patients, including children, I don't have a secretary but I can manage.

LIVE AND LET LIVE

My problem? One of my patients (she is married to her 30s). When she sits down she spreads her legs wide and holds my right hand as I treat her. She also looks at me with flirtatious eyes.

What really kind me was what she told recently after not returning for treatment for more than a week. She said, "I'm sorry I could not come last night, my 'you know how women are.' There are several days every month where we could not be available." And then, as I started to treat her, she looked back again.

I'd be through with her dental problems very soon but she said she would be being my last child on and soon for treatment. She pays regularly and does not ask for a discount. What shall I do about this?

AKASH

Why don't you tell her to stop looking you because you might hit her gun instead of her teeth? Or maybe you should get a secretary to help keep secrets and to "chaperone" you, then for you stand beside you when you are treating the patient.

One suggestion: Just you have to think about this. It is not her husband and not his but a hint. Tell her you want to improve your clinic and living better equipment. He will likely believe you and tell his wife to change some more your facilities are not up to par.

Having a patient like her suggests you are an attractive person. However, since there are too risks to risk, maybe she is not happy with her husband.
